HÖGRE SEMINARIUM I OFFENTLIG RÄTT

Den 2 december välkomnar vi er att delta vid ett högre seminarium i offentlig rätt med Love Rönnelid, postdoktor i offentlig rätt, på temat

The development state as regulatory strategy

The developmental states of North Asia are the most successful examples of economic development in the history of the world. These were characterized by private ownership of the economy, but combined with heavy state control over and regulation of central sectors. The seminal studies of how these states constructed public bodies that oversaw the economy (Johnson; Amsden; Wade) have been at the core of much reevaluation of development economics and related disciplines (e.g. Rodrik). However, these strategies can equally well be viewed as regulatory strategies and evaluated from a comparative legal perspective. The seminar will present ongoing research of exactly this character. Comparative studies of Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and China hold valuable lessons for present-day developing countries. These countries all had able public law institutions that held significant steering capacity over the economy in central areas: They controlled capital flows, currency rules, banking regulation, intellectual property rules, and conditions for entry of foreign investors. The aim of the research is to provide better benchmarks for evaluating the developmental effects of present-day (international) law affecting these policy areas. In particular, the aim is to use this study to evaluate the developmental impact of international investment law.

Datum: fredag den 2 december

Tid: 16.15-18.00
